I believe that overseas occupational pension income (superannuation) should be treated the same as Australian superannuation income for tax purposes.

It is very unfair that income from pension schemes that people have paid into all their working lives from their salaries after tax should be treated differently to income from Australian superannuation schemes.

For me personally I have a total income of $36000, all derived from UK pension schemes, and I am taxed on all this income whilst my Australian counterparts can have an income of many thousands of dollars and pay no tax at all. Kind regards

Edward Beaumont
